KEY TAKEAWAYS

- ❖ Semiconductor shortages identified as EV industry's biggest pain
- ❖ Localization depends on future Indian fabs coming online.
- ❖ Software-defined vehicles deepen semiconductor–software interdependence
- ❖ India needs stronger automotive-grade software and R&D capabilities
- ❖ Domestic semiconductor ecosystem critical for EV transition success

PANEL SESSION

The Race to Build India's Charging Infrastructure Backbone

BALAJE RAJAN

Chief Strategy Officer,
Tata Motors Passenger Vehicles &
Tata Passenger Electric Mobility

ARAVIND PRASAD

Head - Charging Infrastructure
Business, Ather Energy

ANANT BADJATYA

CEO,
IndoFast Energy

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- ❖ Charging anxiety is highest among non-EV considerers due to low visibility of chargers
- ❖ Hardware, software, grid constraints, and poor operations all hinder charging reliability
- ❖ OEMs like Tata and Ather are building infra themselves to improve customer experience
- ❖ Two-wheeler charging needs a separate, lighter, low-voltage standard for scalability
- ❖ Battery swapping shows promise, especially for B2B, offering speed, safety, and interoperability at scale

QUOTES

"With more EV models with fast charging and longer range options, EV sales are back on the growth path."

— Shailesh Chandra, MD and CEO, Tata Motors Passenger Vehicles

"Localisation will not only help in reducing the product costs but also protect the industry from external headwinds like pandemics and geopolitical developments."

— Ravi Chawla, MD and CEO, Gulf Oil Lubricants

"If you become too ambitious and put infra in highways where the utilisation is less, sooner or later it will backfire."

— Rahul Bharti, Senior Executive Director, Corporate Affairs, Maruti Suzuki India

"We have to recognize that there could be denial of parts and raw material due to geopolitical issues."

— Vikram Gulati, Country Head & EVP (CA&G), Toyota Kirloskar Motor

"The global electric vehicle supply chain has to de-risk itself from hostile players"

— Eric Vas, President - EVs, Bajaj Auto

"The auto industry is not just about product innovation. It's about survival of the fit, including who can secure the supply chains."

— Mahesh Babu, CEO, Olectra Greentech

"We should be focused on recycling of battery materials and rare earths, and on concepts such as battery passports."

— Ashim Sharma, Senior Partner, Nomura Research Institute
